Dear G. H.:

Your letter of September 27th has meandered from one address of mine to another and came to rest here in Washington. It appears that I have now already missed the opportunity to accept your invitation for October 12th. As a practical matter, I probably missed the 19th as well. However, I should enjoy the chance to meet with your editors and would be glad to have lunch with you on some other Friday. I have no particular preference but I am sure that I could do it on Friday, October 26th.

I suggest you send any answer to this letter to Princeton Pike, Princeton, New Jersey.

With best personal regards,

Very sincerely,

William H. Jackson

Dear W. H. F. Jr.,

I just called your New York office to see if I could involve you into coming to one of our editors' luncheons late this month. You
